Risk and Presidential Decision-making
The emergence of foreign policy crises

Luca Trenta

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Dipartimento di Scienze Politiche Biblioteca</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Inv.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coll. COST. K5R. D. 239</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

Introduction: risk and the Cold War/post-Cold War divide 1

1 Risk in International Relations and foreign policy 8

Risk in the post-Cold War world: from sociology to International Relations 9
Risk and decision-making: the laboratory of decision theory and the world of foreign policy 23
Conclusion 27

2 A new framework: risk vs. risk trade-offs, crises and International Relations 37

Risk, uncertainty and risk management: a foreign policy perspective 38
Uncertainty, risk and risk management: towards operational definitions 43
Presidential decision-making and ‘risk vs. risk trade-offs’ 49
The risk vs. risk trade-off framework and presidential decision-making in foreign policy: connections and contributions 52
Countervailing risks, uncertainty and foreign policy crises 57
Rethinking the Cold War/post-Cold War divide 62

3 ‘I should have said that we don’t care:’ the Kennedy Administration and Cuba, 1961–1962 73

The Eisenhower Administration, American decline and ‘their man’ in Havana 74
The Kennedy Administration and Cuba: from the campaign trail to the Missile Crisis 78
Conclusion 101
Contents

4 ‘We are sticking with the Shah’: the Carter Administration and Iran, 1977–1979 111
   Nixon to Ford: the new Cold War, the loss of certainties and the US man in Tehran 112
   Iranian revolution and American risk management: from early commitments to the final tragedy 117
   Conclusion 146

5 ‘Why is this happening and we are not doing anything?’: the Clinton Administration and the risky road to Srebrenica, 1992–1995 159
   The new game: the end of the Cold War and
   George H. W. Bush’s legacy 160
   Clinton and Bosnia: a candidate’s freebie, a president’s nightmare 165
   Conclusion 188

Conclusion 200

Risk and risk management in foreign policy 201
Propositions and foreign policy crises 204
Risk, uncertainty and risk management: rethinking sociological approaches and decision theory 208
Risk, uncertainty and risk management: crisis, foreign policy decision-making and ‘risk-superior’ moves 211
Continuity for continuity’s sake? 213

Bibliography 219
Index 249