List of first level degree programs offered in English at Sapienza University of Rome

1. Classics (L-10)

The Program intends to provide a solid and accurate basic education in the knowledge of the ancient world, and especially in the Greek and Latin languages and literatures, ancient history, classical archaeology, and the legacy of the Classics in medieval, modern, and contemporary culture. The Course contents will tend to be based on a broad vision of the classical world and will focus on the properly cultural, anthropological, and reception aspects of ancient civilizations; they will also benefit from the opportunities offered by the Course's location in Rome, with the possibility of on-site experiences, visits to museums, and workshops in libraries.

The particularity of providing this training in English allows, compared to a degree course in Italian, greater opportunities for graduates to pursue university studies or embark on a career in an international context. Indeed, knowledge of classical languages, literatures, and civilizations, the ability to study, deepen understanding, and critically analyze complex texts and phenomena, as well as the English language communication skills learned during the course, determine a qualified professional profile suitable for carrying out cultural work in an international context, with particular reference to the sectors of knowledge dissemination and cultural outreach (publishing, journalism, protection and enhancement of cultural heritage).

Within the educational path, foundation courses are offered to students in the first year, aimed, among other things, primarily at learning the classical languages, Greek and Latin; in the second year, core modules of the classical sector, particularly aimed at deepening the knowledge of classical literatures, Greek and Latin, and the history of the ancient world, and other educational activities; in the third year, core modules of the classical sector, modules of related disciplines, elective modules, aimed in particular at extending the knowledge of the classical world to areas other than the historical and literary (such as archaeology, art history, history of thought) and at combining the knowledge of classical civilizations with that of their developments in medieval, modern and contemporary European culture, and a final written paper.

Learning is achieved through the most up-to-date theories and techniques for approaching ancient texts and evidence (papyri, inscriptions, manuscripts, iconographic material, archaeological finds and monuments, etc.) and with the aid of all possible IT support. It will also be possible to benefit from the opportunity to invite foreign teachers to carry out teaching activities (Visiting Professorships, i.e., cycles of seminars with foreign guests).

2. Global Humanities (L-42)

The Program is characterized by the interdisciplinary integration of literary, artistic, socio-anthropological, historical-religious, and politico-juridical pathways, aimed at ensuring a solid foundational preparation in the fields of Global Humanities.

The program intends to provide a robust theoretical and methodological grounding both for entry into the job market and for the continuation of studies in Italy or abroad. The first year of the course enables students to acquire a basic education in various disciplinary fields such as the methodology and sources of historical research, geographical disciplines, literary and historical-artistic disciplines, and the fields of anthropology, law, economics, and sociology. The educational objective is to enable students to achieve the knowledge and skills expected for these educational areas, while simultaneously gaining an essential understanding of the themes and issues of global humanities, and acquiring methodologies and analytical perspectives functional to the identification of an initial body of interdisciplinary knowledge.

The first year is completed by a course specifically aimed at a reflection on the theme of Global Humanities, taught within a related or supplementary discipline. The acquisition of credits in the basic disciplines is therefore conceived, due to its methodological and interdisciplinary nature, as propaedeutic to the in-depth study of the core subjects that takes place in the second year.

In the second year, the educational objective consists of deepening knowledge and skills in the core subjects of the degree program, mainly historical, philosophical, psychological, historical-religious, political science, economic, and socio-anthropological subjects. The number of exams planned for each area and the corresponding number of credits allow students to delve into their specific areas of interest. The second year is completed by the possibility of taking an elective course. The third year provides, in addition to the acquisition of knowledge related to related subjects, the opportunity for students to freely choose courses that complete and consolidate their educational path, based on personal interests. In the area of related and supplementary subjects, students can choose to deepen paths related to human rights and international law, global and public health, the in-depth study of the history and literary cultures of Africa and Asia, and the history and culture of Europe. The educational path is completed by credits for other educational activities and the final exam. A fundamental educational function is assigned to the formative and guidance internship, conceived as an experience of knowledge and discovery of the world of work and as a moment for putting acquired knowledge into practice.

The course aims to train professionals who are able to work in the field of transcultural mediation, in international organizations, and in public and private bodies dealing with migrations and diasporas.

The course is aimed at students, both Italian and foreign, interested in understanding and exploring the processes of global transformation of contemporary societies, historical and historical-artistic studies from a renewed global and transnational perspective, the history of religions, anthropology, sociology, global and public health, and comparative legal studies.

3. Business sciences (L-18)

The Program trains professionals suitable for carrying out managerial, consulting, and entrepreneurial activities within private and public organizations operating in real and financial markets.

The curriculum guarantees a fundamental multidisciplinary education aimed at understanding the functioning of modern business organizations and financial systems, as well as the main characteristics of the relevant environmental context.

Graduates will develop adequate skills in economic, managerial, financial, and legal disciplines, developing appropriate methodologies for analysis and critical interpretation of business structures and dynamics.

After an initial period (3 semesters) in which students are provided with the indispensable basic knowledge in the business, economic, mathematical-statistical, and legal fields, the degree program offers differentiated educational paths to address specific aspects of business direction, management, and administration, particular types of companies, and financial intermediation, also within the scope of sustainability issues and principles. Consistent with the educational objectives, the degree program is therefore structured into didactic/educational paths to enhance the aptitudes and scientific-cultural preferences of each student.

4. Economics and Finance (L-33)

The Program aims to equip students with the economic knowledge, theoretical and quantitative analysis tools, and critical skills necessary to understand the mechanisms governing the functioning of economic systems, through the analysis of the behaviour of individuals, organizations, and institutions that interact in individual markets, to develop forecasts on the trends of relevant economic variables, to reason about the problems of contemporary economies, and to evaluate the effects of public policies.

The proposed study path offers four alternative curricula, the first three in Italian and the fourth in English.

The initial period of the study path, lasting three semesters, is common, respectively for the curricula in Italian and for those in English, to all degree programs of the Faculty and aims to provide students with basic knowledge in the business, economic, legal, and mathematical-statistical fields (common core).

At the end of the common core period, the study path of the various curricula offers didactic modules oriented towards the in-depth study of specific areas of analysis and the development of advanced skills in the relevant sectors. At this level, students also have the possibility to make some autonomous choices, aimed at allowing the personalization of their path and designing a partly multidisciplinary educational trajectory.

Some in-depth study options and practical training activities, also based on laboratory and seminar activities, complete the educational offer of the degree program. The natural conclusion of this path is the final examination, strongly integrated with one or more of the aforementioned targeted in-depth study modules.

The career opportunities for graduates in Economics and Finance concern all sectors of economic activity and, in particular, those that require interpretative skills of both the macroeconomic situation and the functioning and evolution of individual markets. Graduates in Economics and Finance will be able to successfully integrate their economic skills into managerial careers in private companies and public bodies, pursue professional and research activities in private companies (e.g., banks, financial institutions) and the third sector (e.g., non-governmental organizations), in public administrations (e.g., government research services, national statistical institute, national institute for public policy analysis, national institute for environmental protection and research), and in independent economic professions, in national and international institutions (e.g., central banks, economic research institutes, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the World Trade Organization).
