Thesis: Yugoslavia's Brokerage Role in the Cold War: Analyzing Structural Holes Using Betweenness Centrality as a Method (ongoing)

This thesis investigates the Cold War era from a network theory perspective, focusing on how structural holes in the geopolitical landscape were exploited. Using betweenness centrality, the study reveals Yugoslavia's role as a strategic intermediary between the socialist and liberal blocs. The research offers insights into Yugoslavia's tactical significance in international relations and its distinctive position during the Cold War.
