RESEARCH INTERESTS

I am an internationally recognised expert in the fields of organisational sensemaking, institutional theory and, more broadly, organisation theory. I am primarily interested in qualitative research that falls within my domain of expertise as well as within related areas such as identity, culture, narratives, organisational knowledge and learning, routines, categories, and legitimacy. My work has combined sociological and organizational theories to understand the work practices and behaviours of, amongst others, shopfloor operators, courtroom judges, business consultants, global bank managers, air force pilots, e-markets sellers, chefs, migrant workers, and news workers.

TEACHING ACTIVITY

I have taught and coordinated several courses at undergraduate, master, executive, and doctoral levels. These included:

- Academic Writing (advanced)
- Applied research design
- Changing organisations
- Designing and managing organizations
- Developing management research
- Knowledge management/Knowledge and the firm
- Leading and managing people
- Managing change
- Organization theory
- Organizational behaviour
- Qualitative research methods
- Sensemaking in crisis situations
- Strategic management
- Theorizing and publishing qualitative research
